A PRELIMINARY.

ONE always has a longing to know of his ancestry, to trace his lineage and scan the generations through which he has come, even if his ancestry has not been lustrous on the tented field or prominent in the councils of the state, never-the-less there is a pride of family which would unroll the past and display the names of those who in their several spheres have played there parts in the grand drama of life.

So I have endeavored to gather up the scattered members of my family and frame its genealogical history. It may not be of general interest yet I opine it possesses importance enough to warrant its preparation and publication. If more of our family records had been preserved we should have many interesting items to enter into the general history of the country, throwing light upon many now obscure points, affording data for properly weighing and determining the course of events.

The period covered by this genealogy embraces 252 years commencing with the emigration of William Randall from England in the year 1637. With much labour I have traced out the family and its branches. A task onerous in the extreme by reason of imperfect records and the shadowy nature of tradition. My work I submit to my family and friends in the hope that its perusal may afford as much satisfaction to the reader as it has the compiler.

What is to man of greater worth,
No matter what his station,
To know his life from day of birth,
His ancestry and relation.

In the year of 1637 our fore father William Randall came from England to Marshfield Mass. where he lived for a short time.

In the year of 1640 he went to Scituate Mass., there he married and had nine children.

At a certain date unknown Joseph Randall and his wife Abigail, the father and mother of Caleb and George, passed out. The latter had them buried on his farm, which was formerly owned by his parents.

About the year 1825, George Randall walled in a piece of his land by the road side. He then said to three of his brother's grandchildren, William, Nathaniel and Stephen, "If you will take up the bodies of your great-grandfather Joseph and great-grandmother Abigail Randall, and bury them within these grounds, I will give it to the Randalls for a Randall burying ground." The three brothers, doing as they were requested, placed stones at the head and foot of of each grave, but no dates thereon, George not giving any deed or writing of any sort or kind to prove to the rising generation that he gave the above grounds for such a purpose.

William Randall, the father of the latter children and grandfather to Pardon the writer of this book, was born in the town of Johnston, R. I., March 7th, 1804, his parents living at that time upon the south side of the old Killingly turnpike road, Johnston, R. I.

When William Randall reached the age of twelve years, he left his home and went to Olneyville, R. I. There he went to work for Messrs.

John Pettis & Alfred Anthony, in the tannery business, boarding with one of his employers, Mr. John Pettis, who lived upon the north side of the Hartford road, first house east of the old Union Mill. While boarding there William got acquainted with one of Mr. Pettis's servant girls, Miss Almy E. Stone, of Cranston R. I. They finally made love.

May 15th, 1825, Wm. Randall and Miss Almy E. Stone, were united in marriage, they going to housekeeping in Olneyville, R. I., near the junction of Broadway and High street.

In the year 1829, they moved into the old Remington house opposite the way. Albert C. Randall, the father of Pardon, was born within the latter house.

In the year 1831, William moved to the west side of Valley street, Providence, R. I., near the old paper mill. He worked within the latter mill.

About the year 1831, William built a cottage upon "Sky High Hill," North Providence, R. I., for his elder brother, Joseph Randall, to live in, not charging him any rent so long as he occupied the same, which was a score of years or more.

In the year 1833, William built a cottage upon the east side of Valley street, south of the three bridges, Providence, R. I. He occupied the same. About this time William and his younger brother Stephen carried on the butcher business together. They had a slaughter house on Delaine street, Olneyville, R. I., where they killed their own beef, each one having a cart of his own and peddled his own meat about the city.

In the year 1851, William purchased a farm of 15 acres off the town of Johnston, R. I. The farm stood upon the south-west corner of the Hartford Pike and the old Killingly road, there being a small cottage thereon. William placing his father Charles and his stepmother Lydia therein. At the same time he built a house for himself thereon, in which he lived unto the day of his death.

Sarah and Nathaniel Randall, third son of Charles and Elizabeth Randall, of Johnston, R. I., had three children, all born in Providence, R. I.
